Marley Puts on Big

Fall Community Program

The Marley Community Church is putting on a real live program for the young folks and the community in general, showing what a church can do for a community.

A moving picture outfit has been secured and the young folks club will present their first moving picture program on August 15th. It has been planned to give a movie program every two weeks at this church as follows: August 15th; Sept. 5th; and 19th; Oct. 3rd and 17th.

The movie program scheduled for Friday night will be an exceptionally interesting one. It is a brand new, 5 reel, super-special, entitled "FOR HIS SAKE".

"FOR HIS SAKE" marks a new era in moving pictures. No one can see it without being helped. It is a picture that will live.

The following is a short synopsis of the story: For 2,000 years the influence of Jesus Christ for good has been the greatest in the history of the world. While this is evident in literature, art and music, it is seen most of all in the lives of men and women.

Living in New York's picturesque East Side is a Christian woman—the widow Dean—whose daughter, Ethel, has been taught that Jesus Christ is the personal friend of the individual. When her mother is taken from her, Ethel prays to God for guidance. Because of her marriage to a poor man, Mrs. Dean has been disowned by her wealthy brothers. Now, at her time of need, Ethel starts out to search for her uncles, in company with Jimmy Ryan, an orphan "newsie," her devoted pal.

Living in luxury in Ardley is Mrs. Dean's oldest brother, Sidney Bentham, a professing Christian, and yet a headstrong man. Because of jealousy he planned to crush his younger brother, Donald, who lived in the slums. As a result of a series of dramatic events, Ethel and Jimmy find her uncle Sidney and are adopted into his home, where Ethel's sunshiny nature wins her uncle's heart. She is much distressed, to learn of his plan to ruin his younger brother in business, and prays to God to help her avert the disaster. How this is accomplished by a practical use of the Word of God, is told in a series of tense situations and dramatic events unsurpassed in the history of religious motion pictures.

The following films will be shown later: "Orphans in the Storm," "The Call from the Wild," "The Courtship of Miles Standish" and "Silas Marner." The picture for Sunday, August 24th, will be, "The Four Seasons."

They Are Not Married Yet, But Will Be Soon

The power of the press is a peculiar thing. It can make a person dead, bring the dead to life and even marry couples long before their wedding day and do many other curious wonders when errors creep into its columns.

In last week's issue, THE NEWS-BULLETIN said that Miss Inez Holmes of New Lenox, and Charles O'Donnell of Joliet were married, but we have since been informed that the wedding is not to take place until the latter part of Aug.

WANTED: 100 YOUNG PEOPLE—100

and others to attend the special services at the Mokena M. E. church, Sunday evening, August 17 at 7:30 p. m. There will be an attractive program of music, a very special feature of which will be singing of that famous old solo "Calvary" illustrated by twelve beautiful slides.

The pastor will answer the question in many minds to-day: "How can a Young Man or Woman Serve God?" In this hour when so many are becoming dissatisfied with the gross materialism of the day, how good it is to hear the voice of God say, "Come, let us go into the house of the Lord."

Miss Norton of Minn., Engaged to Teach Primary Dept., Mokena School

The Mokena School Board has engaged Miss Norton of Minnesota to teach the primary department of the Mokena public school in place of Miss Jennie Praalberg, who resigned recently. She comes well recommended. She taught school in Orland township a few years and set an excellent record there. The Mokena School Board feels fortunate to be able to sign up Miss Norton for the next term.

MOKENA PEOPLE VISIT OTTAWA FLOOD AREA

Last Sunday Martin Mueller and family of Mokena motored to Peoria and enroute they went thru the flooded area around Ottawa, Peru, La Salle and Spring Valley.

At Ottawa the concrete road is built along side of high hills and when the flood waters came they washed dirt, gravel and huge boulders onto the highway blocking it completely. Culverts were washed out and detours had to be made for many miles. In some places the highway was covered with a foot or more of mud. Autoists with hip rubber boots tried out the road before going further in their cars. In some places the water still covered the highway.

The Rock Island was hard hit at Ottawa and between Peru and La Salle sections of track were completely washed out, the rails and ties hanging from slender earth supports, the tracks being under six feet of water in many places.

Work trains are busy from both sides of the wash out, but as the water has not entirely receded and the earth is very soggy it will be a few days if not longer before it is safe to run the mainline R. I. has been running its through trains over the Santa Fe.

The Illinois river did much damage to farms, many corn fields being completely inundated the water being even with the tops of the corn. Oats which had been cut and shocked, was carried away by the swift stream. In some places where the waters had receded oat bundles were seen in tree tops, showing how high the water had been. All kinds of sights were to be seen. Some dwelling places were flooded and when the waters ran off a heavy scum of mud was left clinging to everything that had been under water.

The Kankakee river also overflowed and did much damage.

County Auditor Hedgecock of Joliet was in the vicinity of Kankakee Saturday and reported that he drove for miles on the concrete road with the water up to the running boards of the auto.

One farmer whose field bordered the river, lost his entire season's oat crop when the flood waters carried off every bundle of oats shocked in the field.

It is said that a cloud burst was the cause of the flood.

MOKENA "ASPHALT" STREET WEARING OUT

Mokena's Front street which was surfaced with a tar composition last summer, is not standing up under the traffic. The tar surface has worn off in patches leaving the bare stones exposed. The company which put on the composition are going to patch up the bad spots it is understood. The village has had sand hauled along the spots to be repaired.

It is contended that if the village would have waited a few years and then laid a concrete road they would have had something that would last. As it is the village went in debt to build this street last summer and if the street does not hold up any better than it has it will be necessary to resurface it again in a few years and by that time the old debt will not have all been paid and perhaps a new bond issue may have to be floated to do the work.

LEFT—Being a bachelor, Homer Rotherover has no first hand experience how wives should be treated. The picture shows his interest in the famous "Burning Ghat" in India, where widows were burned to death until the law prohibited that practice.

Right—Rotherover is shown in front of the famous Peng Yang monuments in Korea. Here, as always, he is interested in children, believing that they should get the Christian message early in life. He has published many songs and books to help bring this about. He finds that the Koreans and other Asiatics respond to gospel music the same as the Americans.

FLOODS DELAY MAIL SERVICE ON R. I. R. R.

The floods in the vicinity of Ottawa and points further west last week, disarranged mail schedules in general. The Mokena post office has been feeling the effects for a few days. Mail has been coming at all times of the day. Right after the flood there was no first class mail arrivals from the west at all. Conditions are much improved and the usual service will be restored soon as the trains are able to run on schedule time again.

PUBLIC SERVICE BUILDING HIGH POWER LINE

The Public Service Company which is constantly adding to and improving its service, is now employing a large force of men in the building of its high power line from Chicago Heights to Joliet. The new power line is being constructed on property acquired by the company along the E. J. and E. railroad. Huge steel towers, 100 feet high are being erected to carry the power line which will be a big factor in the distribution of electrical power between the two cities. The Public Service Co., is constantly expanding and developing new fields.

RAFFAUF & OLSON OF MOKENA OPEN INSURANCE AGENCY IN JOLIET

In last week's issue it was stated that James Raffauff and Gustave Olson, both of Mokena were going to open an insurance agency with Silas Hopkins, real estate man of Joliet, but they have since made a change in their plans and will go in business for themselves as the Raffauff & Olson Insurance Agency with headquarters in the Cutting Building, Joliet. They will cover all branches of insurance.

OAT AND CORN CROPS ARE PROMISING GOOD YIELD

The oat crop is looking better than a bumper one. Farmers are busily engaged cutting oats. The recent storms have flattened some of the oats, making cutting somewhat difficult. In all the oat crop will yield heavy. The corn crop is standing good and a good crop is indicated. Some fields which have been flooded off and on, will not yield much more than fodder, but in the majority of cases, the crop will be good. Illinois has always produced a crop and such a thing as a crop failure is unknown in this state.

Some of our good farmers have taken a rather pessimistic attitude on the situation and feared they would not get much of a crop but from the way things look now, they will fare better than they had anticipated.

Mokena Loses to New Lenox 5 to 1

GETTING AWAY FROM ONE'S PAST

"TIS grievous," an old English writer says, though I am not at all sure that he is correct in this, "that with all amplification of travel both by sea and land, a man can never separate himself from his past history."

We are accustomed ordinarily in making such reflections, to apply the principle only to those things in our past that are unwholesome or questionable, and to emphasize the permanent influence of evil things, but it is equally true of our contact with healthy or noble or beautiful things. No experience of life, when it is past, leaves a man quite the same as he was before. One man has climbed Long's peak, or crossed the ocean, or heard a great musician, or seen a beautiful picture, or been under the influence, even for a brief time, of a fine character, comes away from the experience with a little different view of life, a broader outlook, a higher conception of duty. He can never sink quite to the level he occupied before.

Isaiah Harding, one of our neighbors when I was a child, had never been outside of the state. He had ploughed and sown and reaped his crops and had known no other outlook than the broad prairies that stretched endlessly before him. Then he visited the Centennial exposition in Philadelphia. The trip cost him one hundred and fifty dollars, he confessed after he came back. It seemed a small fortune in 1876, but it was worth it all. He was a new man for the experience, he had seen a new world, he had had an unexpected vision and he never tired of telling of it; he never got away from it.

It was a trifling experience which sent me to college—an irritating stimulating criticism of my appearance and my ignorance which I could not quite forget or ignore. The young fellow who was responsible for the remark had no thought of the effect of his words, I imagine, but his words bored into my consciousness and I could never get away from them. Ultimately they changed the whole current of my life and thought.

It is true of all of us. Every emotion we feel, every noble generous word we utter or thought we have, every experience that is ours, good or bad, leaves a permanent impression upon our lives and characters.

ECONOMIZING GASOLINE

I WAS going off for a motor trip with a very little knowledge of the habits and vagaries of automobiles in general and this one in particular.

"If you want to save gasoline," Spencer said to me, "drive steadily at a moderate speed. It takes gasoline to stop and start the car frequently, and nothing eats it up like pushing the machine beyond its normal speed." I was interested.

An automobile is apparently not unlike people. Kinney was building a house for me. It was begun in April and was to be finished by September. The work dragged at first and I spoke to him about it.

"Don't worry," he said, "we have oceans of time. I'll have the job finished a month before the day agreed upon." He was mistaken, however. There were delays at a crucial time, a strike laid the men off for two weeks, and when September came, although Kinney was "steppin' on 'er" hard, the house lacked a month of completion. He had wasted his opportunities at the beginning and no matter how much gasoline he used up at the end he could not make the grade.

There was Culver, on the other hand, who did his work so regularly that he never seemed rushed or worried for fear he would not be finished in season. Other fellows thought that Culver was lucky or a genius but the real explanation was that he was a steady, consistent worker, who economized his gasoline throughout the whole trip. He got farther with the expenditure of less energy than anyone else I ever knew.

The fellow who does his work regularly, who keeps from worry, who sets for himself a moderate, intellectual pace and keeps it every day will accomplish more by the end of the year than the fellow who works by fits and starts, who loafs at the beginning of the week, and then pushes himself to a pace of fifty miles an hour on Sunday. It is the moderate uniform rate of speed that saves the nerves and economizes the gasoline.

Very few young people give much thought to the future. The fact that they will some day be old, or weakened, or broken in strength does not occur to them. The young fellow, however, who dissipates his energies or his emotions, who lives the fast life, who taxes his physique beyond its normal resistance, ultimately pays the penalty. Before his journey is ended, his strength will be gone, the gasoline will be out, he will have wasted his powers. He will come to the heavy hills of middle life without the power to carry him up.

Each of us has about so much reserve power. If we waste it today, we shall need it tomorrow. If we use up our energies in youth, we may expect a premature, weakened old age.

The Ideal and the Actual

By REV. JOHN C. PAGE
Teacher of Bible Doctrine, Moody Bible Institute, Chicago.

TEXT—When He came down from the mountain, great multitudes followed Him.—Matt. 8:1.

The mountain is the place of vision, of aspiration, and of idealism. Our Lord went up into a mountain and taught. The highest ideals of character and conduct are found in that body of teaching known to us as the Sermon on the Mount. In that sermon He presents the ideal life which through His redemptive power He intended to realize in His saved and separated people.

Ideals and idealists are good in their place. Out of their place, they are deceitful and dangerous. The substitution of any human idealism for God's way of salvation is in this day to be dreaded and avoided. The salvation of God deals not only with conduct, but goes to the inmost recesses of one's being from whence proceed the issues of life. A recent cartoon entitled "The Idealist and the Realist" portrays in the foreground an ideal peace plan for Europe, unfolded on a scroll. In the background of the picture there are several volcanoes belching forth their hidden forces which are labeled "suspicion," "rivalry" and "hate." Turning to the bystander, the idealist asks the question—"Don't you like my peace plans?" "Yes," replies the realist, "but you'll have to wait until we've plugged up those volcanoes." Between the ideal and the real there is a great gulf which can be bridged only by a power sufficient to span the chasm.

Our Lord was an idealist with perfection as His ideal. He was perfect in His attitude toward His father, and could say, "I do always those things that please Him." He was perfect before men, and challenged them when He said: "Which of you convinceth me of sin?" He is perfect as a Savior. The salvation which He accomplished for us is perfect, for it is written: "He hath perfected forever them that are sanctified." This includes all Christian believers, for, "We are sanctified by the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all." Yes, our Lord was an idealist with power—saving power—power to achieve the ideal both for Himself and for us.

Mount Sinai was the power of His indwelling in "them that walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." Apart from power to achieve, idealism is an aggravation. The vision in the mountain would mock us if it could not be wrought out on the plain of actual experience.

"When He came down from the mountain, great multitudes followed Him. And, behold, there came a leper and worshipped Him, saying, 'Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean.' And immediately his leprosy was cleansed." Yes, He has power on the plain of the daily life to realize the precepts presented on the mount of vision. He can cleanse a leper, both in the physical and in the moral realm. He is not merely an idealist on the mountain top, but a Savior in the valley as well, with power sufficient to overcome all the disorders that are in the world through sin.

Notice the words which describe His power. He said to the leper, "I will; be thou clean." To the centurion who sought healing for his palsied servant, there is given the word, "Go thy way; and as thou hast believed, so be it done unto thee." Concerning Peter's wife's mother, it is written, "He touched her hand, and the fever left her."

On the mountain or in the valley the Son of God is sufficient—sufficient as a Teacher, sufficient as a Savior. He gives the vision of a life of blessing and fruitfulness, then manifests His power to overcome every obstacle in the way of its realization. What shall be our attitude to this perfect Savior—perfect in precept and in power? With the display of His mighty power as seen in this chapter, there appear on the scene three men. The first, stirred by a good impulse, says: "Lord, I will follow Thee whithersoever Thou goest." But impulse will not stand the test. Another comes with similar words, expressing his willingness to follow on certain conditions, but is confronted with the matter of an unconditional yielding to the Lord. Of the third man it is written, "He arose and followed Him." This expresses purpose, a heart purpose, not a mere impulse, nor the imposing of conditions, but the acceptance of Jesus as Savior and Lord. In Him the ideals of Christ were realized, and Matthew the tax-gatherer became Matthew the apostle, the witness, the martyr, the glorified servant of the Christ.

Should Be Our Prayer

Let us look in our hearts, and see how we stand before God. It will take more than a mere trifling investigation. It will take quiet, deliberate heart-searching, with none but the Holy Ghost for our company. "Search me, O God, and try me, and see if there is any wickedness in me," was not only David's prayer, but should be ours.—Len G. Broughton.

HOW TO KEEP WELL

Dr. Frederick R. Green,
Editor of "Health."

BETTER ROADS—BETTER HEALTH

EVERYONE admits the value of good roads, but what possible connection is there between good roads and health?

Good roads have always been regarded as one of the necessities of a civilized state. The old Romans were famous road builders and some of their highways are still in existence.

Macaulay, in his "History of England," says: "Of all inventions of the human mind, the alphabet and the printing press alone excepted, those inventions which have bridged distance have done most for the civilization of man." Steamboats and railroads made possible the exploration of the civilized world in the Nineteenth century. The automobile, airplane, and the radio are going to complete its civilization by bringing all nations and races together.

But what have good roads to do with health?

The state board of health of Kansas says that good roads prevent disease.

How?

In many ways.

The removal of weeds and trash and the drainage which follows road building destroy breeding places for mosquitoes, flies and other insects which are known as disease carriers, not to mention chinchbugs, grasshoppers, and other pests which hurt the crops.

Hard roads and oiled roads also promote drainage and prevent insect breeding. Dry roads offer pedestrians and especially children who are compelled to walk to and from school, a dry path.

Good roads promote travel and make it easier for the farmer to move his produce, to get his supplies and to take his family to town. Good roads and automobiles have improved health by making it possible for the doctor to see more patients and to see them more promptly, to send his patients, when necessary, to a hospital and to give them better care.

Good roads have made it possible for townships to unite in building central high schools and so provide as good education for country children as the isolation of the farmer and his family.

Anything which contributes to the physical or mental wellbeing of the individual helps prevent disease and prolongs life.

Good roads have reduced the amount of dust and so have decreased the irritation to the nose, the throat, the eyes, and the ears. Dust catches disease germs and the less dust we inhale, the better off we are.

Good roads, either in the city or in the country, mean healthier, happier, and longer lives for all of us.

OPENING DEAF EARS

THE radio is the wonder of the present. It has practically annihilated space. It has increased a speaker's audience far beyond the capacity of any building on earth. It is estimated that over a million American citizens heard President Coolidge in his address before congress last December. This was probably the largest audience which has ever listened to one man. Yet it is small compared to what the audiences of the future may be. In a few years radios will be as common as telephones.

But the radio has done something else that is greater than annihilating distance or making all of our citizens one vast audience.

It has opened the ears of the deaf. Not all deaf persons can hear the radio, but some so deaf that they have not heard the human voice for years are able to hear over the radio with perfect ease. The New York League for the Hard of Hearing is so enthusiastic over the radio that it has equipped its clubrooms with radio apparatus carrying 24 head sets. Warren Pond, the president of the New York league, writing in the Volta Review, a magazine for the deaf, says, "When my radio was installed and, sitting in my home, I heard clearly the notes of a song, the tears came to my eyes. After living in silent land for 45 years, the spell was broken and I found a new heaven and a new earth."

Think what this means to the man or woman whose ability to hear has practically disappeared, to whom not only the human voice but all forms of music are forever silent. What is it that makes it possible for the ear, deaf to ordinary sounds, to respond to radio waves? Is there something about the radio wave that is different from the ordinary sound wave and that produces a vibration in the ear that is dead to ordinary sounds? We do not know, but we do know that the development of the radio and its widespread use has brought happiness to thousands of men and women who have been cut off from the world of sound for years. No one could anticipate that such a miracle would take place. The unexpected results of science are sometimes the most marvelous.

SUFFERED TWELVE YEARS WITH STOMACH TROUBLE

"My recovery has been a surprise to myself and all my friends," recently declared Jacob Ferdinand, R. F. D. 2, Fond Du Lac, Wis., a prominent citizen of this city, in relating his remarkable experience with Tanlac.

"The suffering I went through from stomach trouble for 12 or 13 years simply can't be described. In my efforts to find relief I spent over one thousand dollars, but kept getting worse instead of better. A large part of two years I was laid up in bed and for four months of that time I couldn't get up at all.

"Finally I sent my daughter for a bottle of Tanlac with the result that I found immediate relief, and seven bottles made a well and happy man of me. I will gladly talk to anyone personally and answer all letters regarding my experience with Tanlac. It proved a godsend to me."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Accept no substitute. Over 40 million bottles sold.

Swamp-Root a Fine Medicine

Thousands upon thousands of women have kidney or bladder trouble and never suspect it.

Women's complaints often prove to be nothing else but kidney trouble, or the result of kidney or bladder disease.

You may suffer pain in the back, headache and loss of ambition.

Poor health makes you nervous, irritable and may be despondent; it makes any one so.

But hundreds of women claim that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, by restoring health to the kidneys, proved to be just the remedy needed to overcome such conditions.

Many send for a sample bottle to see what Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder medicine will do for them. By enclosing ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. IS HE DAVIS' DOUBLE?

J. M. (Bill) Nye, secretary and guard to the Democratic Presidential nominee, is often mistaken for Mr. Davis himself.

DAVIS REVIVES LEAGUE ISSUE

Hts Klan, Republican Party, and Denies Wall Street Tie in Speech.

Clarksburg, W. Va.—John W. Davis, Democratic nominee for President of the United States, accepted the designation of his party here in a speech which indicted the Republican party for corruption in office.

Mr. Davis revived the League of Nations issue, dragging in by the heels the Madison Square garden platform declaration for a referendum on the subject, waxed eloquent in denunciation of the Ku Klux Klan without mentioning the organization by name, and pledged himself to administer a just government if elected.

The Democratic nominee was explicit in making alleged corruption in public office his chief issue, but was reluctantly forced by Senator Thomas J. Walsh of Montana, who made the notification address, to dignify a charge made by William Jennings Bryan, that he was the attorney for "big business" interests.

"The argument," said Senator Walsh in his notification speech to Mr. Davis, "that you are a Wall Street man, in an opprobrious sense, is without merit, as is the assertion that your nomination is a Wall Street nomination."

Mr. Walsh, in defending Mr. Davis on this charge, paid eloquent tribute to him on his law record, particularly as solicitor general of the United States. Mr. Davis, acknowledging this defense, said:

"I take note, Mr. Chairman, in passing, of what you were good enough to say concerning my past career and conduct as a lawyer. I have no apology to offer for either. The answer to any criticism on that score must come not only from those who, like yourself, have won the highest distinction at the bar, but also from the more than one hundred thousand other honest and patriotic men and women who make up the legal profession in this country. They know and they will gladly join you in testifying that the upright lawyer sells his services but never his soul."

"I have no clients today but the Democratic party and, if they will it so, the people of the United States."

"I indict the Republican party in its organized capacity," said Mr. Davis, "for having shaken public confidence to its very foundations. I charge it with having exhibited deeper and more widespread corruption than any that this generation of Americans has been called upon to witness."

"I charge it with complacency in the fact that corruption and with-lingame fard the effort of honest men and I charge it with gross favoritism to the privileged and with utter disregard of the unprivileged. I charge it with indifference to world peace and with timidity in the conduct of our foreign affairs."

Mr. Davis did not spare President Coolidge, his opponent in this campaign, declaring that Mr. Coolidge could not escape responsibility for the conditions he condemned.

The Democratic nominee was emphatic in his declaration of conviction that the United States should not only enter the world court, but the League of Nations.

Jack and Solomon exercised unusual care in guarding the camp and organizing for defense in case of attack. It was soon after Washington's departure that Arnold went away on the road to the South. Solomon followed, keeping out of his field of vision. The general returned two days later. Solomon came into Jack's hut about midnight of the day of Arnold's return with important news.

Jack was at his desk studying a map of the Highlands. The camp was at rest. The candle in Jack's hut was the only sign of life around headquarters when Solomon, having put out his horse, came to talk with his young friend. He stepped close to the desk, swallowed nervously and began his whispered report.

"Suthin' neev'arious be goin' on," he began. "A British ship were lyin' nigh the mouth o' the Croton river. Arnold went aboard. An' officer got into his boat with him and they pulled over to the west shore and went into the bush. Stayed that till mos' night. If 'twere honest business, why did they go off in the bush alone for a talk?"

Jack shook his head.

"Soon as I seen that I went to one o' our batteries an' tol' the cap'n what were on my mind.

"D-n the ol' British tub. We'll make 'er back up a little," sez he. "She's too clus anyhow."

"Then he let go a shot that ripped the water front o' her bow. Say, Jack, they were some hoppin' around on the deck o' the big British war sloop. They h'isted her sails an' she fell away down the river a mile 'er so. The sun were set when Arnold an' the officer came out o' the bush. I were in a boat with a fish rod an' could jess see 'em with my spy glass, the light were so dim. They stood thar lookin' for the ship. They couldn't see her. They went back into the bush. It come to me what they were goin' to do. Arnold were a-goin' to take the Britisher over to the house o' that ol' Tory, Reub Smith. I got thar fust an' hid in the bushes front o' the house. Sure 'nough—that's what were done. Arnold an' the other feller come along an' went into the house. 'Twere so dark I couldn't see 'em but I heerd 'twere them."

"How?" the young man asked.

"Cause they didn't light no candle. They sot in the dark an' they didn't talk out loud like honest men would. I come erway. I couldn't do no more."

"I think you've done well," said Jack. "Now go and get some rest. Tomorrow may be a hard day."

Jack spent a bad night in the effort to be as great as his problem. In the morning he sent Solomon and three other able scouts to look the ground over east, west and south of the army. One of them was to take the road to Hartford and deliver a message to Washington.

After the noon mess, Arnold mounted his horse and rode away alone. The young brigadier sent for his trusted friend, Captain Merriwether.

"Captain, the general has set out on the east road alone," said Jack. "He is not well. There's something wrong with his heart. I am a little worried about him. He ought not to be traveling alone. My horse is in front of the door. Jump on his back and keep in sight of the general, but don't let him know what you are doing."

A little later Mrs. Arnold entered the office of the new brigadier in a most cheerful mood.

"I have good news for you," she announced. "A British officer has come in a ship under a flag of truce to confer with General Arnold. I sent a letter to Margaret Hare on my own responsibility with the general's official communication. I invited her to come with the party and promised her safe conduct to our house. I expect her. For the rest we look to you. Let us have a wedding at headquarters. On the night of the twenty-eighth, General Washington will have returned. He has agreed to dine with us that evening."

"I think that she must have observed the shadow on my face for, while she spoke, a great fear had come upon me," he testified in the court of inquiry. "It seemed clear to me that, if there was a plot, the capture of Washington himself was to be a part of it and my sweetheart a helpful accessory."

"You know much that I am eager to know," I said. "The general has not told me that he is to meet the British. May I know all the good news?"

"Of course, he will tell you about that," she assured me. "He has told me only a little. It is some negotiation regarding an exchange of prisoners. I am much more interested in Margaret and the wedding. I wish you would tell me about her. I have heard that she has become very beautiful."

"I showed Mrs. Arnold the miniature portrait which Margaret had given me the day of our little ride and talk in London and then an orderly came with a message and that gave me an excuse to put an end to this untimely babbling for which I had no heart. The message was from Solomon. He had got word that the British warship had come back up the river and was two miles above Stony Point with a white flag at her mast-head.

"I went out of doors. Soon I met Merriwether coming into camp. Arnold had returned. He had ridden at a walk toward the headquarters of the Second brigade and turned about and come back without speaking to any one. Arnold was looking down as if absorbed in his own thoughts when Merriwether passed him in the road. He did not return the latter's salute. It was evident that the general had ridden away for the sole purpose of being alone.

"I went back to my hut and sat down to try to find my way when suddenly the general appeared at my door on his bay mare and asked me to take a little ride with him. I mounted my horse and we rode out on the east road together for half a mile or so.

"I believe that my wife had some talk with you this morning," he began.

"Yes," I answered.

"A British officer has come up the river in a ship under a white flag with a proposal regarding an exchange of prisoners. In my answer to their request for a conference, some time ago, I enclosed a letter from Mrs. Arnold to Miss Margaret Hare inviting her to come to our home where she would find a hearty welcome and her lover—now an able and most valued officer of the staff. A note received yesterday says that Miss Hare is one of the party. We are glad to be able to do you this little favor."

"I thanked him.

"I wish that you could go with me down the river to meet her in the morning," he said. "But in my absence it will, of course, be necessary for you to be on duty. Mrs. Arnold will go with me and we shall, I hope, bring the young lady safely to headquarters."

"He was preoccupied. His face wore a serious look. There was a melancholy note in his tone—I had observed that in other talks with him—but it was a friendly tone. It tended to put my fears at rest.

"I asked the general what he thought of the prospects of success for our cause.

"They are not promising," he answered. "The defeat of Gates in the South and the scattering of his army in utter rout is not an encouraging event."

"I think that we shall get along better now that the Gates bubble has burst," I answered.

This ends the testimony of "the able and most valued officer," Jack Irons, Jr.

CHAPTER XXVIII

As an Army With Banners.

The American army had been sold by Arnold. The noble ideal it had cherished, the blood it had given, the bitter hardships it had suffered—torture in the wilderness, famine in the Highlands, long marches of half naked men in mid-winter, massacres at Wyoming and Cherry Valley—all this had been bartered away, like a shipload of turnips, to satisfy the greed of one man. Again thirty pieces of silver! Was a nation to walk the bitter way to its Calvary? Major Andre, the adjutant general of Sir Henry Clinton's large force in New York, was with the traitor when he rowed from the ship to the west shore of the Hudson and went into the bush under the observation of Solomon with his spy-glass. Arnold was to receive a command and large pay in the British army. The consideration had been the delivery of maps showing the positions of Washington's men and the plans of his forts and other defenses, especially those of Forts Putnam and Clinton and Battery Knox. Much other information was put in the hands of the British officer, including the prospective movements of the commander in chief. He was to be taken in the house of the man he had befriended. Andre had only to reach New York with his treasure and Arnold to hold the confidence of his chief for a few days and, before the leaves had fallen, the war would end. The American army and its master mind would be at the mercy of Sir Henry Clinton.

Andre would have reached New York that night if The Vulture had not changed her position on account of a shot from the battery below Stony Point. For that, credit must be given to the good scout Solomon Binkus. The ship was not in sight when the two men came out in their boat from the west shore of the river while the night was falling. Arnold had heard the shot and now that the ship had left he feared that his treachery was suspected.

"I may want to get away in that boat myself," he suggested to Andre.

"She will not return until she gets orders from you or me," the Britisher assured him.

"I wonder what has become of her," said Arnold.

"She has probably dropped down the river for some reason," Andre answered. "What am I to do?"

"I'll take you to the house of a man I know who lives near the river and send you to New York by horse with passports in the morning. You can reach the British lines tomorrow."

"I would like that," Andre exclaimed. "It would afford me a welcome survey of the terrain."

"Smith will give you a suit of clothes that will fit you well enough," said the traitor. "You and he are about of a size. It will be better for you to be in citizens' dress."

So it happened that in the darkness of the September evening Smith and Andre, the latter riding the blazed-face mare, set out for King's Ferry, where they were taken across the river. They rode a few miles south of the landing to the shore of Crom pond and spent the night with a friend of Smith. In the morning the latter went on with Andre until they had passed Pine's bridge on the Croton river. Then he turned back.

Now Andre faced alone down the road alone on the back of the mare Nancy. He came to an outpost of the Highland army and presented his pass. It was examined and endorsed and he went on his way. He met transport wagons, a squad of cavalry and later, a regiment of militia coming up from western Connecticut, but no one stopped him. In the faded hat and coat and trousers of Reuben Smith, this man, who called himself John Anderson, was not much unlike the farmer folk who were riding hither and thither in the neutral territory, on their petit errands. His face was different. It was the well-kept face of an English aristocrat with handsome dark eyes and hair beginning to turn gray.

A little out of Tarrytown on the highway the horseman traveled, a group of three men were hidden in the bush—ragged, reckless, unlettered country lads waiting for cows to come down out of the wild land to be milked. They were "skimmers" in the patriot militia, some have said; some that they were farmers' sons not in the army. However that may have been, they were undoubtedly rough, hard-fisted fellows full of the lawless spirit bred by five years of desperate warfare. They were looking for Tories as well as for cattle. Tories were their richest prey, for the latter would give high rewards to be excused from the oath of allegiance.

They came out upon Andre and challenged him. The latter knew that he had passed the American outposts and, thought that he was near the British lines. He was not familiar with the geography of the upper east shore. He knew that the so-called neutral territory was overrun by two parties—the British being called the "Lower" and the Yankees the "Upper."

"What party do you belong to?" Andre demanded.

"The Lower," said one of the Yankees.

Rare Sea Shell

In a specially provided case in the foyer of the American Museum of Natural History, there was exhibited recently for the first time one of the most highly prized cone shaped shells ever found in the world. According to scientific authorities, it is properly called "The Glory of the Sea."

It is about five inches in length, of peculiarly slender appearance, graceful proportions, and has a tapering spire. It suggests an unfolding rosebud. The ground color is pale ivory, overlaid with a mosaic of thousands of triangular figures ranging from an eighth of an inch to almost microscopic size. These triangles are outlined in chrome yellow or deep chestnut brown.

"Why, Aunt Dinah," she exclaimed, "you surely haven't married again?"

"Yessum, honey, I has," was Aunt Dinah's smiling reply. "Yessum, as often as de Lawd takes 'em, so will I."

JESUS CLEANSSES THE TEMPLE

LESSON TEXT—John 2:13-22.
GOLDEN TEXT—"My house shall be called the house of prayer."—Matt. 21:13.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Loves His Father's House.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus and the Temple Traders.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Right Conduct in God's House.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Reverence and Care for God's House.

I. Jesus Attending the Passover (v. 13).

He went up to Jerusalem very often to attend the various feasts. Beginning at the age of twelve this custom was habitual with Him to the end of His ministry. He was under the law and therefore He obeyed it (Deut. 16:16), but primarily He went up because it was His Father's house. It is important that all people from their youth up should make the attendance upon the house of God a habit of their lives.

II. The Temple Defiled (v. 14).

For the various sacrifices in the temple many oxen, sheep and doves were needed. Many persons came from distant parts of the land; therefore, it was impracticable to bring their sacrifices with them, so they brought money and bought the animals needed. This privilege the Lord had granted to them (Deut. 14:24-26). This exchange was necessary, but when evil men used it as an opportunity for gain it became an offense before God. If Christ were to come to many of our so-called houses of God today He would find them polluted in just as aggravating a way. His purging the temple courts shows the need of purity and order in all matters connected with divine worship.

III. Jesus Cleansing the Temple (vv. 15-17).

1. Driving Out the Merchants and Animals (v. 15). Being the Lord of the temple, the very Messiah who should come to His temple. He had the right to cleanse it, to drive out those who polluted it. It is not said that He used the scourge of cords but, at any rate, it was the symbol of authority.

2. His Command (v. 16). "Make not my Father's house an house of merchandise." Merchandise is legitimate in its place. Any use of the Lord's house other than to worship and honor Him is to make it a place of merchandise, to pollute it. There is great danger of a worldly spirit intruding into the domain of religion. Men who unite with the church for temporal interests, men who come to the house of worship with worldly matters uppermost in their thought, ministers who serve as professionals, men who bring their ill-gotten gains to help further the work of the Lord, in fact all who do not behave properly in the Lord's house, are defiling it and therefore all such must meet His judgment.

3. His Zeal (v. 17). He was so completely dominated by the passion to do the will of God that He unreservedly gave Himself to His work. This was according to the prophecy, "The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up." We should take His act as an example to us in the divine service and manifest commendable zeal. This reform did not prove permanent. A few years later He cleansed it again. This shows how quickly the human heart is under the control of sin. The only permanent reformation is that which is wrought in regeneration. The new birth is necessary.

IV. The Jews Demanding a Sign (vv. 18-22).

They demanded of Jesus that He show His authority for such behavior. He told them that the only sign that would be given was His death and resurrection. Destroying the temple and raising it up in three days refers to His crucifixion and resurrection. The resurrection is an unalterable proof of His divine sonship (Rom. 1:4). Jesus came forth from the grave of His own power. The Jews did not want a sign. They were only finding excuses for their wickedness. Men today who are demanding proof of Christ's divinity do not really wish the proof but are only trying to find excuses for their sins. Jesus had the ability to justify His ways before God and man. After the resurrection the disciples remembered the words of Jesus on this occasion. This shows that no sowing of the truth shall eventually fail. This ought to be a great comfort for Sunday school teachers and Christian workers.

SNAKES' MAKE-BELIEVE

"Hiss, hiss," said the snake in the zoo; "it is night, so let us wander."

"Hiss, hiss," said another snake; "yes, let us wander."

"Hiss, hiss," said a third snake as his tongue went quickly in and out from his mouth, "let us be up and doing."

"I heard that expression from a visitor the other day," he explained.

"The visitor thought I was asleep, or maybe he wouldn't have said such a thing, for he said it in anything but a complimentary fashion."

"He said that we were lazy, tresomes creatures. He said that we were never up and doing."

"Ah, he was visiting us in the daytime when we were feeling sleepy. He ought to come around at night when we begin to think about wandering a little."

"Hiss, hiss, let us wander," said a fourth snake.

"Hiss, hiss, let us have adventures," said a fifth snake.

"Hiss, hiss," said a sixth snake, "let us be moving now. Do not let us stay still any longer."

"Good idea," said a seventh snake; "hiss, hiss, a good idea."

"Excellent," said an eighth snake. "I feel restless myself."

"And so do I," said a ninth snake. "Hiss, hiss, I, too, feel restless."

"What about me? Don't go without me," said a tenth snake.

"We won't, hiss, hiss," said the others.

"I want to go, too," said another snake.

"And so do I," said yet another. "And I want to go, hiss, hiss," said still another snake.

So all the snakes started. Where did they go? Did they get out of their zoo homes and wander off, far into the night? Did they leave every night and arrive back every morning in time for breakfast, if it happened to be a breakfast morning?

For of course the snakes don't eat three meals a day as people do. They eat a great deal at a time and then don't eat for ever so long again.

Some of them eat once a week, some do not eat more than once a month, and some do not eat as often as that.

But they eat great, huge meals when they do eat, it is very, very true.

No, the snakes in the zoo did not leave every night and go off a-wandering.

But every night they became restless. They wanted to have some exercise. So they wriggled around and around their zoo homes and their cages.

To them they were having adventures. They did not feel badly that they could not go long distances, for they could go on and on wriggling and squirming all through the night.

No one would tell them to go to sleep and not keep others awake. No one would tell them that even if they didn't feel sleepy they should try to get some sleep.

They were allowed to stretch themselves and wriggle and wander about their zoo cages. And this was their joy.

They could imagine they were taking long trips; they could imagine all sorts of wonderful happenings. It made them very happy.

Sometimes their keeper would watch them and would say to them.

"Good snakes—at least most of you are! You are so well-behaved, you do not cause me any trouble; you are gentle and you are even affectionate with me."

"Your dispositions are nice, so go ahead, good snakes, and have your make-believe adventures which to you are so real!"

His Answer

A local celebrity, visiting one of the schools in a certain town, thought it proper to ask the youngsters a few questions:

"Can any little boy or girl tell me," he said impressively, "what is the greatest of all virtues?"

There was no reply.

"We will try it again," said the visitor. "What am I doing when I give up my time and pleasure to come and talk to you in your school?"

"I know now, mister!" exclaimed Johnny Smith, raising his hand. "Well, what am I doing, little man? 'Buttin' in'!" was the startling rejoinder.—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

HOW THIS WOMAN GOT STRENGTH

Put Up 300 Quarts Fruit, 500 Glasses Jelly and Took Care of Four Children

Norwalk, Iowa.—"I have been meaning for some time to write and tell you how much good your medicine has done me. When I started to take it I was almost bed fast and would have been in bed all the time if I had had any one to care for my children. There was so much swelling and pain that I could hardly take a step. I took seven bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and used Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash, and found that so healing. I am not entirely well yet for I was in bad shape when I started your medicine, but I am so much better that I am not afraid to recommend it, and I think if I keep on taking it, it will cure me. I have done my work all alone this summer, caring for four children, and I canned 300 quarts of fruit and made 500 glasses of jelly, so you see I must be better. I feel pretty good all about the medicine."—Mrs. C. J. WENNER-MARK, Box 141, Norwalk, Iowa.

I am not entirely well yet for I was in bad shape when I started your medicine, but I am so much better that I am not afraid to recommend it, and I think if I keep on taking it, it will cure me. I have done my work all alone this summer, caring for four children, and I canned 300 quarts of fruit and made 500 glasses of jelly, so you see I must be better. Mrs. Alvin T. Hert, vice chairman of the Republican National committee, has just announced the opening of the National headquarters of the women's bureau of the campaign on the second floor of the Wrigley building, Chicago. Eastern headquarters have been opened in New York city.

The Women Voters Speak

The voices of the women of America are making themselves heard. From Maine to California, with a unison which is infectious, they are saying, "We want Coolidge and Dawes."

In the weeks which have elapsed since the Republican party nominated its standard bearers, the women have been weighing these candidates and their respect has gone out to these men, who represent the best qualities in American manhood.

All signs show that the women of the country have been weighing the Republican platform and that its pledges have won their support.

Women know that the running of the nation's business is simply house-keeping on a national scale. They know that there is nothing mysterious about it. They want the government to be managed as simply and as inexpensively as they manage their own homes. The women have heartily approved the budget system which the Republicans have established at Washington. They were quick to endorse the reduction of taxes by $1,250,000,000 per annum and the curtailment of public expenditures without in the slightest disturbing business. When the Republicans stated:

"We pledge ourselves to the progressive reduction of taxes of ALL THE PEOPLE as rapidly as may be done with due regard for the essential expenditures of the government administered with rigid economy," the women knew that the country would be safe if Republican candidates were elected to office.

The platform's promise to continue the party's solicitude for all those suffering any disability as a result of service to the United States in time of war is particularly appealing to the women.

Pledges of law enforcement, the quest to the states to promptly consider the Child Labor amendment, the declaration for high standards of wages, working and living conditions for women workers, and a score of other progressive planks have won the support of the women.

Their minds at rest about the program of the Republican party if elected to run the government for the next four years, the women have started their campaign. They want Coolidge and Dawes and they are working to get a record-breaking number of women to the polls next November.

"JUST TWENTY-ONE"

One of the important factors in the election of the man who is to be the next President of the United States, will be the young men and women who are just old enough to vote.

Some of these first voters are wage earners, others are still in college. They share a common responsibility, that of expressing the views and wishes of the youth of America.

Here and there when a young man or woman can be persuaded to talk about it, they are heard to say that they want to keep President Coolidge on the job at Washington for the next four years. They can do it.

COOLIDGE CHOICE OF WOMEN VOTERS

Mrs. A. T. Hert Praises Child Labor Policy.

"What the future holds for the wage earner and the wage earner's family, is of vital interest to the women of this country," Mrs. Alvin T. Hert, vice chairman of the Republican National committee, stated in a recent interview. "Therefore, the promises of the political parties on the subject of labor are of the greatest importance. When we reflect that there are eight and one-half million women wage earners including two million married women wage earners who are directly affected by labor legislation, as well as the wives of the laboring men who are interested in the protection afforded labor, the importance of the question can be plainly seen.

"Every woman in America is interested in the question of child labor and wants to see the children of this country safeguarded during the most important years of their lives.

"A fair deal to labor was assured by the Republican party in its platform accepted by the national convention in Cleveland. The platform pledges continued progressive reduction of taxes, rigid economy in government and promises protection against undue exactions.

"To the Republican party goes the credit of being the leader in the campaign for national legislation to protect the children. It was the party that enacted the first federal child labor law," Mrs. Hert said. "The Republican platform commended congress for its prompt adoption of the recommendation of President Coolidge authorizing congress to pass protective child labor legislation. It also urged the prompt consideration of the amendment by the legislatures of the various states.

"This law, when ratified, will afford nation-wide protection for child workers.

"The average woman of today is worker. She either works to support herself and those dependent upon her or she works to make the family income buy as many comforts for her family as possible.

"The last federal census showed that out of 12 occupations, only 35 did not have women workers. Women have entered the realm of industry and they must be carefully protected. The action of the Republican platform in favoring high standards of wage, working and living conditions among women has received widespread commendation.

"The election of President Coolidge and Mr. Dawes, supported by a Republican congress, will mean continued prosperity for the average home."

WOMEN OUT TO BEAT 1920 VOTE

Women are getting down to the business of voting.

Statistics show that approximately 25 per cent of the women eligible to vote, actually voted in 1920. This means only about one out of every four.

In 1920 one state had 3,462,879 voting citizens, her total vote was 2,090,468. What about the 1,372,411 who did not vote?

The women's bureau of the Republican National committee, with headquarters in Chicago, has just issued an appeal to the women asking them to see that every eligible voter in their families goes to the polls on registration day.

Women are out to round up the "civic slackers," and this means men as well as women.

Power Must Flow

No. 10 in a series of statements about this Company's business.

The announcement that the Public Service Company of Northern Illinois has been awarded the Charles A. Coffin Award for 1923, is a tribute to the territory in which this Company operates as well as the service it renders.

This award was made to this Company in competition with the electric light and power companies of the United States "for distinguished contribution to the development of electric light and power for the convenience of the public and the benefit of the industry."

IN a business such as the Public Service Company of Northern Illinois operates in serving 202 communities with gas or electricity, constant vigilance and most modern equipment are necessary to guard against sudden hazards.

To meet emergencies, at any hour of the day or night, this Company has fully equipped service crews located at strategic points in the territory.

Whenever any trouble is reported, these trained men are dispatched to the scene. The trouble is located and the necessary work done to insure service.

That customers who have had occasion to call upon these repair crews appreciate their prompt response is indicated by the following excerpts from letters received:

"It would be extremely ungrateful on my part not to write you this morning and express my deepest appreciation of the almost miraculous service rendered at the time of our pumping washout. The flood was terrific and simply put the entire plant out of commission. The whole system, of course, depended on your current, and your men responded with marvelous promptness and efficiency, and by locating the trouble and fixing us up with power and light made it possible for our pumping plant to resume."

A large manufacturer commends service crew:

"We had the first serious power interruption today at 9:03 A.M. and the trouble was cleared up at 11 A.M. We believe the interruption was unavoidable as the repair man advised us that a short circuit was caused by a bird's nest in a junction box. We wish to advise that service rendered was excellent and that the repair men were on the job in a remarkably short period of time."

Another customer comments favorably on gas service repair work:

"We especially appreciate the type of men sent to our house and the quality of their work. They were courteous, quiet and efficient. The Inspector gave my mother some valuable advice about the stove and the repair man did the best repairing that has been done to it."

And here's a letter for a little different service.

"Riverside Post of the American Legion wishes to thank the Public Service Company for its kindness in installing the flag pole at the Riverside Grammar School."

This Company is organized to serve its customers and every precaution is taken to maintain efficient service, yet we welcome suggestions at any time.

The District Manager will be glad to give suggestions from customers his personal attention and if you desire he will send his personal representative to call upon you.
